EVEN ANIMALS HAVE SAVINGS ACCOUNTS

Did you know that saving is so important, even animals save! Though they don't have a credit union to go to, animals save up for the future.

Of course, animals don't need money, but they do need food. So lots of animals store their food so they can come back and eat it later. Ants, bears, bats, cats, mountain lions, polar bears, even spiders—they all save their food for later... when they're good and hungry.

Mountain lions cover their food with leaves. Polar bears store their food in the snow. Spiders wrap up their food in silk. Beavers save up piles of branches for the winter.

From chickadees to leopards, from kangaroo rats to crocodiles, animals all over the world store their food in amazing ways.

Just like animals, humans need to save too. It's how we get the things we want... and sometimes, we need our savings for emergencies or when we need a little extra money for some special reason.

Saving your money is one of the most important lessons you can learn in life. Take it from your local beaver, spider or polar bear, you've got to save up for the future!
